THURSDAY EVENING, MAY 11.

TAPE WORM TRAP .- A man has obtained a patent for a trap for catching tape worms. This trap consists of a hollow ball, divided into two parts, which are hinged together, and provided with a spring upon their insides, so that they can be made to suap together like a steel trap. The unfortunate one, in whom the long drawn out reptile has taken up its abode, is required to starve himself for two, three or four days, and even louger. Then, when the tape is supposed to have arrived at a proper stage of starvation, the trap is baited with some deli cious delicacy, attached to a long string, and swallowed by the patient, who retains hold of the string. The trap having arrived in the peighborhood of the tape, who is supposed by this time to be eagerly seeking for "a good square meal" to appea e his ravenous appetite, he sticks his head into the trap, when spap goes the string, and all the patient has to do is to haul him up through his throat.
